The creature stood up as tall as he could which was not very tall at all. He had the hands and feet of a monkey, a perfectly round furry belly, ears like an elf, and the hairy wrinkled face of a very old man. A caveman, perhaps. He had large brown eyes, and on top of his head, two extra eyes on long stalks, like a snail. "I am a Sand Fairy," he announced proudly. "And I am as old as time itself."

"Are you a caveman, then?" Robert asked.

The Sand Fairy glared at him. "I am much more refined than an ordinary caveman. But I once granted wishes to cavemen, back a few thousand years ago. They asked for things like a nice T-Rex steak for supper, or perhaps an Ichthyosaurus, if they were more in the mood for fish."

"I have decided to become a knight."

"A knight?" asked Antonia. "You mean like from a fairy tale? What are you talking about, sir?"

They traveled to many lands fighting robbers, helping the poor, and rescuing people from danger. They had many great adventures. They stood for honor and justice. I wish to do the same. I started fumbling around my jacket pocket for the little yellow notepad. I felt both pockets, but they were both empty.

"Pete, you are going to be really mad at me," I said slowly.

"Why?" Pete said suspiciously.

"Because I think I left the notepad in Miss Jones's shed!" I said, feeling like a complete fool.

"Tina! Now we are really in trouble. Miss Jones is definitely going back to the shed, and if she finds our little yellow notepad with the notes about her in it, then... I don't know what will happen, but it's not going to be good!" Pete said hysterically.

"Calm down, Pete! She has no proof that you and I were in her yard. I didn't put our names in the notepad so I think we're okay." I tried to calm Pete.

"Then why can't you get your baby back from him? Is it hidden?" asked Elias.

The dragon snarled. "He has taken my baby to his tower and locked it in a cell in the basement. The tower is made of solid black stones and I am too big to get inside the small doorway or go down to the basement."

Elias thought about that for a minute. "If the door is too small for a big dragon, maybe a little boy could get in."

The dragon went completely still for a moment, then starlight twinkled off her teeth as her mouth widened in a grin. "Maybe you can help after all," she said. "My name is Rhyssofol, but you may call me Rhys."

"I am Elias," replied the young boy.
